3ID, recruiting take part in epic football battle

Pat Young
Fort Stewart Public Affairs

Before an audience of 15,000 at a high school football game, 3rd Infantry Division Deputy Commanding General-Rear Brig. Gen. Jeffrey Phillips and 3rd ID-Rear Command Sergeant Major Jeffrey Ashmen welcomed about 40 of the nation's sons and daughters into the Army in the traditional reading of the Oath of Enlistment during a pregame show, Sept 4.

For the encore, teamwork and touchdowns were tantamount in turning Kingsland, Ga., into a virtual national championship, as two nationally-ranked teams, the Georgia State Champion Camden County Wildcats and the Miami Central Rockets, battled.

The Jacksonville (Fla.) Recruiting Battalion and the 3rd ID worked together to make the event memorable for the spectators with static displays and the time-honored ceremony as a pre-game show.

"A ceremony like tonight takes place in a context of excellence," Brig. Gen. Phillips said. "Two great football teams coming together – wonderful fans supporting them, and in the middle of it all, we get to swear in about 40 young men and women into our Army during a time of war. It demonstrates tremendous support for our nation and for these young people who are carrying so much of the load in the free world."

Command Sergeant Major Ashmen, who grew up in a large city and similarly attended a large school in, ironically, Camden County, N.J., said he understood the appreciation of sporting events such as the Camden vs. Central Miami match.

Command Sergeant Major Ashmen said besides the competition, the game provided a wonderful opportunity to show the new recruits how much they are appreciated.

Jacksonville Battalion Commander Lt. Col. Daniel E. O'Grady said they appreciated the 3rd ID assistance and the support from Fort Stewart-Hunter Army Airfield.

"One of the things we love to do is have synergy with the ROTC programs, Reserve units, and active component units in our area," Lt. Col. O'Grady said. "Fort Stewart-Hunter Army Airfield has been huge supporters of our recruiting battalion. We have a company right there in Hinesville, Ga. We know if we need assistance, that the installation is there to support us. "

Some of that support included 385th Military Police Battalion Soldiers - Staff Sergeant Christopher Evans, Spc. Thomas Hill, Spc. Ronald Taylor, Sgt. Preston Smith, Spc. Willie Barber, and Spc. Michael Howard - who set up two M-1117 Armored Supply Vehicles and equipment as displays to augment Jacksonville's Recruiting Battalion's information booths.

Lieutenant Colonel O'Grady said the young men and women who sign up are of the highest quality.

TF Brawler chaplain conducts proactive marriage workshop

FORWARD OPERATING BASE SHANK, Afghanistan – In an attempt to quell the rising divorce rate affecting deployed Soldiers, the ministry team for Task Force Brawler, 3rd Combat Aviation Brigade, TF Falcon, at FOB Shank, began providing proactive marital counseling in the form of a marriage workshop. The goal of the workshop is to prepare the Soldiers of TF Brawler for the challenges and trials that lay ahead after returning from a year-long deployment.

Led by TF Brawler Chaplain (Capt.) Abraham Sarmiento and his assistant Spc. Armando Abad, the marriage workshop invited Soldiers to learn of more effective ways to deal with situations that threaten the stability of a marriage, such as multiple deployments and the readjustment period following a deployment.

"Most couples wait until their relationship is stressed before addressing these issues," said Chap. Sarmiento. "Proactive, intentional preparation is much less costly and so much more effective."

The marriage workshop began July 19, and was open to not only TF Brawler Soldiers but to other Soldiers and civilian contractors on FOB Shank. A total of 45 participants regularly attended the Monday night meetings, which were held at the Brawler Chapel.

Though the workshop was geared toward deployed Soldiers and their non-deployed spouses, there are five married couples co-deployed with TF Brawler and all five attended the class.

"It is beneficial being deployed with your spouse because we have a support system, which is each other," said Sgt. Kishara Harris, E Co., who is co-deployed with her husband, Spc. Steven Harris, with D Co. "Though even at that, we still face challenges. We left our daughter behind with Family, and it is hard when at least one of us is not there for her."

The core material taught at the workshop is based on the book "The Seven Principles for Making Marriage Work" by Dr. John Gottman. Holding a PhD in psychology, Gottman's book lays a practical guide for couples to follow toward building a successful and lasting relationship.

Spreading the Word is chaplain's lifelong mission

Pfc. Erik Anderson
3rd HBCT Public Affairs

CONTINGENCY OPERATING SITE KALSU, Iraq – Paul Voorhees explained that when he was a young man, his father told him there was no point in staying up all night to pray because God hears you the first time.

Quick quips and one-liners are often offered up by Voorhees as he travels around Southern Iraq. But he is not another commander doing battlefield cir-culatation or handing out awards.

At an age where many Americans are considering retirement options, Voorhees purchased a ticket to Baghdad, and spent nearly a week in August visiting some of his favorite people, U.S. Soldiers.

"To come over here is a privilege for me; to be able to stand among Soldiers," said Voorhees.

Early on, he had aspirations of becoming an ordained minister.

"I went to bible school in Florida from 1980 to 1981," he said. "When my father passed away in 1983, I left school to take over the Family business. I thought my opportunity to minister was over."

Years later the Family business grew, and he found an opportunity to minister again by becoming the chaplain for the Harris County Sheriff's Office in 1994. At the time he was the only chaplain in Georgia that wasn't ordained. It wasn't long before his local church leader took note, and Chaplain Paul Voorhees was ordained.

SUSPIRA, REVIEWED

Sasha McBrayer
The Frontline Contributor

I am not a fan of horror. I'm that girl in the movie theatre who has to hide her eyes during the trailers for "Paranormal Activity." When friends talked me into watching "The Ring," I was sure I was going to die for two or three days afterward.

Psychological horror is a genre for which I have more respect. What's the difference? Instead of ghouls jumping out and scarring you, instead of buckets of blood, it is usually an idea or truth, slowly revealed, possibly ironic, that chills you.

You may be asked how you would feel if you weren't you at all, but just a clone of your original self ("Moon"), or how it would feel to learn you were dead ("The Sixth Sense"). What is your questioned your sanity ("Shutter Island") or were haunted by the beating of your own heart, an organ donated to you by the victim of murder (2009's "Tell-Tale").

Recently, I was able to watch a classic horror film, which has made multiple lists for the best of all time. It's Dario Argento's master piece, 1977's "Suspiria," and it follows Suzy, an American ballet student, studying dance at a prestigious academy in Germany. When two people associated with the school are murdered and one disappears, Suzy begins to investigate the unusual occurrences there and learns the academy has begun decades earlier by a famous witch.

The soundtrack of "Suspiria" is perhaps its most noteworthy feature. Catchy and terribly unnerving, I can still hear its drumming and monstrous cries. Argento uses the loud music as well as profound silences and colorful set decoration to put the audience on edge. Very few special effects are used and yet the murders in his film resemble the horrors of modern day "Saw" films – perhaps "Suspiria" inspired a few of the Jigsaw Killer's traps?

I'm not a fan of horror, but I could pick out some of the genius in "Suspiria." It must have been much more frightening in its day. Thankfully, it didn't give me nightmares.

549th MPs, Families 'escape' to Jekyll Island

1st Lt. Joey D. Hendrix

The team from Headquarters Platoon, 549th MP Co., battles the team from 3rd Platoon, 549th MP Co., in a tug-of-war match at the company's Organization Day held at Jekyll Island.

1st Lt. Joey D. Hendrix
385th Military Police Battalion

The 549th Military Police Company provided their Soldiers an opportunity to leave the Fort Stewart area to enjoy a day of games, food and fun with their Families at the beach last month. Taking full advantage of some of the beauty that Southeast Georgia has to offer, the 549th Enforcers put together an organization day at Jekyll Island.

The day's events started with a scavenger hunt that encompassed much of the 17 square mile island. Groups of Soldiers patterned up to find points and answer trivia questions.

"This was a great way for Soldiers to visit the many historic sites on the island and familiarize themselves with the amenities offered on Jekyll Island," said 1st Sgt. Payne, who put together the scavenger hunt.

The Enforcers also coordinated a volleyball tournament and a tug of war match that determined the winner of the Commander's Cup. Family fun and involvement was created through an egg race that partnered up Soldiers with their young children.

The events success was due in large part to Capt. Kasandra Tharp and 1st Sgt. Payne's decision to hand over the responsibility of coordinating and planning to their Soldiers and the Soldier's spouses. Joanna Neely, Alex Fernandez-Rubio, Spc. Amanda Haney, Sgt. 1st Class Troy Ashley and Sgt. 1st Class Michael Rider worked together to make the organization day happen.

With this escape to Jekyll Island, the 549th MP leaders set a great example for an organization day that involved Soldiers and their families. They set the standard on Soldier and Family involvement, fun and relaxation.

During his trip to Iraq, Voorhees spent a Sunday among the troops of the 3rd Heavy Brigade Combat Team, 3rd Infantry Division, starting with the annual Country's Midnight Express 5K run. The run was simulcast in Columbus, Ga., and at COS Kalsu, Iraq. More than 200 Soldiers ran the route in Iraq, while thousands participated in Columbus.

Following the run, Voorhees attended the protestant service and was the featured preacher during the gospel service, ministering to Soldiers as they came to the altar seeking spiritual guidance.

Voorhees holds Soldiers in very high regard, and this trip is very special to him.

"Soldiers have unconditional support for each other," he said. "It is all about taking care of the person to the left and right."

He believes that God has blessed him, and this trip is his way of giving back to those he admires.

"I'm interested in saving lives, saving Soldiers," he explained. "This is an opportunity for me to help the people that are willing to die for their country. If I can put a spark in one person's life, it is worth it for me."

"The marriage workshop offers the opportunity for the participants to remain connected emotionally, even when they are physically separated," said Spc. Abad. "It offers tools and guidance to continue strengthening the foundation of the marriage and also to protect it from anything that can affect it."

The seven principles within the book are centered toward positive interaction between a couple, open communications when problems arise, and understanding the personalities and desires of both partners in a relationship.

The marriage workshop expounds upon these principles by actively involving the participants in practical exercises and scenarios. The parameters of the scenarios are taken from the book, while members of the workshop act out each role. Chaplain Sarmiento leads the class in a group discussion afterward on how the exercise went and what could be done to improve the outcome.

According to Chap. Sarmiento, a study shows that at least 10 percent of the married couples within the Army will be divorced soon after redeploying. Chaplain Sarmiento aims to make that number much lower for TF Brawler.

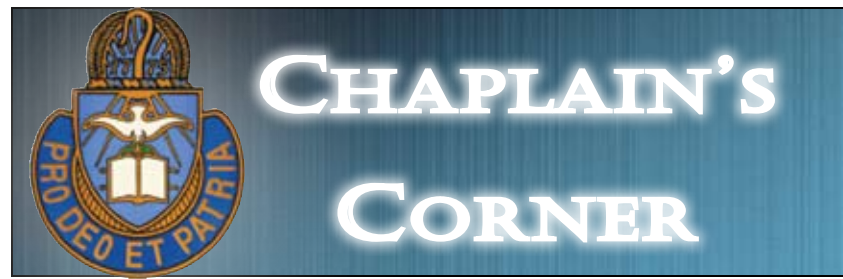

"Every relationship experiences conflict and periods of alienation, but the difference between the masters and disasters is their ability to repair," said Chap. Sarmiento.

"I learned from the class that what helps a marriage are things called 'repair tips,'" said Spc. James McDaniel, with Headquarters and Headquarters Company, TF Brawler. "Spouses are going to argue. But instead of just shutting down, or just arguing about nothing, we learned it is better to take a moment, calm down, then deal with the problem."

The six-week course concluded with a graduation ceremony for all the participants, Aug. 30. Testimonials were given by some of the workshop attendees, and names were drawn for gift certificates donated by restaurants in Savannah. Along with a certificate of completion, Chap. Sarmiento gave marriage workshop graduates words to remember.

"It is our desire that you and your spouse work together because it will help in strengthening your relationship," said Chap. Sarmiento. "I encourage you to be consistent and dedicated in learning these principles and to be effective as you take a practical approach to enhancing your relationship."

Not long ago, I was going through some old boxes and came across a letter and some pictures of my father who served in the Navy during World War II on the Solomon Islands. In the letter, Dad was writing home and to share his life experiences and the story of finding faith in an unlikely place with the Family.

He wrote: "When I arrived here on this island, all we had was jungle and mud. It was quite an experience. After a few days, I met a Christian young man from New Zealand. Bruce K. Randal is his name. He is one of the best Christians I have ever met. We became fast friends soon and decided to hold a Bible class the next night. We did and six other Soldiers joined us that evening all from differing faith backgrounds.

"The next day Bruce and I decided we would look for a better place to meet because the other was in a place filled with wet brush. We walked about 50 yards and came into a cave in the coral rock; not really a cave because it opened at the top all along, but it was about 20 feet deep and 50 feet long. We were sure it would be a grand spot for a meeting place. We were so happy about our find; we immediately set to work clearing the ground and building a roof to keep out the weather.

"The next night we had another Bible Study and there were 21 present. Our hopes grew naturally at the success we were having, and everyone began to pitch in and make a church out of the cave. We were given seats that were taken from the trucks; we put 10 benches in and built a pulpit, rugged, but okay, and then on Sunday, we held another service. The attendance after a few weeks grew to around 80 Soldiers, so we did rejoice at the hunger and desire the men had to find faith in that place.

"We started having prayer meetings on Tuesday nights, Bible Studies on Thursday nights, and regular Worship Services on Sunday nights. That was six months ago, and it is still going strong.

"At first we used gas lanterns and candles hid in the crevices of the rock for light, but after two months we got electric lights, three of them, and a new roof, mosquito netting in back of the pulpit, and around the entrance to the cave. My hope is this is just one of many little churches the Lord intends to have in the South Pacific.

"We are thrilled with the number of men who have decided to commit their lives to serving God here on the Island. Several have preached before in other churches before coming into the service. About five have shared their plans to become ministers after the war is over.

"From May 27 to June 7, 1945, we had a Coral Chapel Revival for everyone who wanted to come. Every night a different person shared Gods word, each from their own faith journey. You see, we feel like there is no one particular in charge of the services; we have a board of trustees so to speak, but have found in the absence of a chaplain, it is better if we all contribute what we have. That seems to work best for us.

"The revival meetings were very successful. Soldiers who had never before thought much about God decided to begin a life of faith. It is remarkable how even though we are all from differing denominations and faith backgrounds. We all get along great; there is no friction. There is one chaplain who has been helping us; he preached one night of the revival. But because he is spread so thin, we are basically on our own.

"The electric lights give the Coral Cave a beautiful color - pink, purple and yellow etc...

"One Sunday night, an Army major came and gave testimony that he had never expected to find a place like this so far from home in the South Pacific in the middle of a war, and praised God for this church

"The good Lord has provided everything we need, including transportation to and from church. Every service we get to use a truck to pick up and return Soldiers around the Island to their camps.

"We have an address book for all visitors to put their home addresses in; we have song books and sometimes an organ for singing. I am one of the song leaders, when the men sing, the sound carries. One would think it's a choir, for the rocks bring out the sound.

"When I think about what God has done in this awful place, it isn't the attendance that thrills me as much as the joy of finding the presence of God and the beauty of the Coral Chapel here in such an unlikely place so far from home.

"It is as if each of us who attend Worship, Prayer and Bible Study here, all carry with us the presence of God and the memory of the faith we received from our individual faith journeys back home, each a little different, each unique, but all special in their own way. When we join together in faith, and combine our experience and our love of God it is like we are making a Christian soup for all to share and partake of.

"All of us are willing to give of what we have, our gifts, our talents, our experience and our presence with each other and with those who have never considered a walk with God, but now have found the value of it.

"Bye for now, my love to all. Don Stanley."

In my father's story, I am reminded that in our quest for God, we need only look within our own heart, and to the lives of other men and women of goodwill to find the habitation of the Lord.

Dad now is 89 years old and lives in a nursing home in Ohio. He married in Bible College after the war and raised five children. My mother passed away last year. Because of my parent's Godly example, I have served 30 years in the military as a Soldier and the great majority of that as an Army Chaplain. Dad is a retired Assemblies of God minister and remembers all that God brought him and so many others through, during a very difficult time in our nation's history. I am endorsed by the United Methodist Church.

"We are enjoying great success right now, recruiting America's greatest sons and daughters to serve in our all-volunteer Army," Lt. Col. O'Grady said. "Our recruiters are dedicated and they recruit with integrity and they are out prospecting the best of the best. Right now, there is an average of about three-of-10 high school seniors who are qualified to serve in the military based on physical and moral requirements."

And as an added bonus, the new recruits were given front row seats for the night's game, which began with a coin-toss by Brig. Gen. Phillips.

Brigadier General Phillips used an official 3rd ID commander's coin, which he later presented to the head referee. Brigadier General Phillips said he presented it to him because the referee represents the adults who foster the feeling of teamwork, good sportsmanship, and competition.

The crowds did not have long to wait for that intense competition. It began with the kick-off, and turned into a clash of titans, jumping to 29-21 at the half.

One of the recruits, Lawrence Knight, who born in Florida but lives in Hinesville, said the game was intense.

"I didn't expect it to go back and forth so quickly," said Knight, who played football his freshman year of high school. He said he was excited about enlisting.

"I leave in January; I can't wait," he said, adding his job was going to be a tanker, attending Basic and Advanced Individual Training at Fort Knox, Ky.

Prince Young, another recruit who went to school in Cobb County, said he also looked forward to his Army Career.

"I thought joining the Army would be a great learning experience," Young said noting he really wanted to travel and see the world, hopefully starting with Hawaii, Puerto Rico or Brazil.

In the end, Camden County took down Miami Central, 45-42, with senior Matt Ehasz kicking a 19-yard field goal as the clock expired, giving the Wildcats the victory.

Raider memorial receives $1,000 donation

Scott Cahill
Special to The Frontline

Laura Rittenhouse (left), wife of 1st HBCT rear detachment commander Maj. Troy Rittenhouse and founder of the Raider Brigade Fallen Soldier Memorial, poses with Tammy Sawyer, Pioneer Services branch manager, after accepting a $1,000 donation to the memorial. The presentation was made during a luncheon for the local chapter of the Association of the United States Army, Aug. 19. "We are extremely honored to assist with the Raider Brigade's Fallen Soldiers Memorial and help make it a reality," said Sawyer. "We also ask that others in the area do what they can to help. The tight economy has affected all of us, but it is more important than ever that we — either individually or through our companies — try to help honor our fallen heroes in any way we can." Pioneer Services, the military banking division of MidCountry Bank, provides financial services to members of the Armed Forces. The Raider Brigade's Fallen Soldiers Memorial will honor the Soldiers of the First Brigade Combat Team who have fallen in the line of duty. It will be a permanent memorial at Fort Stewart that will cost around $100,000, with construction beginning once they reach $50,000 in donations. To learn more about the memorial, or to donate, visit www.RaiderBrigadeMemorial.com.
